[redacted] was asked if any changes had occurred in the detainee camp over the weekend. He said that he was given a paper by the guards indicating that there would be four basic classes of detainees with regard to privilege/discipline issues. An isolation unit would be utilized for serious violators of camp regulations. All rewards and punishment are to be based on camp behavior and cooperation with investigators. Rewards that may be given to detainees include cold water and the ability to store food in their cells. [redacted] sees these new rules as a positive step in soliciting the cooperation of the detainees.

The interviewer probed [redacted] on his guilt or innocence based on the facts of his detainment. It was mentioned that if [redacted] was truly innocent, he should have no hesitation answering any questions posed by interviewers. If, on the other hand, [redacted] was guilty of some crime, [redacted] should admit his mistake(s) and move ahead with his life in the hopes of one day being released from custody. [redacted] volunteered that he has not been overly enthusiastic about being interviewed during Ramadan. With 10 days of Ramadan left, [redacted] promised that he would be willing to answer any questions that this interviewer poses to him, without an "R.T.N." response, after Ramadan ends. [redacted] was told that no promises could be made to him at this time with regard to when he is called for his next interview.
